

Saving for your children's future?

Discover how investment
companies can help

School fees, university, a deposit for their first flat? Let alone thinking about a pension. The financial demands facing you and your children have never been greater.

That's why it's important to start planning early and make the most of your savings and investments. And why investment companies, with their long-term track record, could be an excellent way to give your children a head start in life.

Introduction

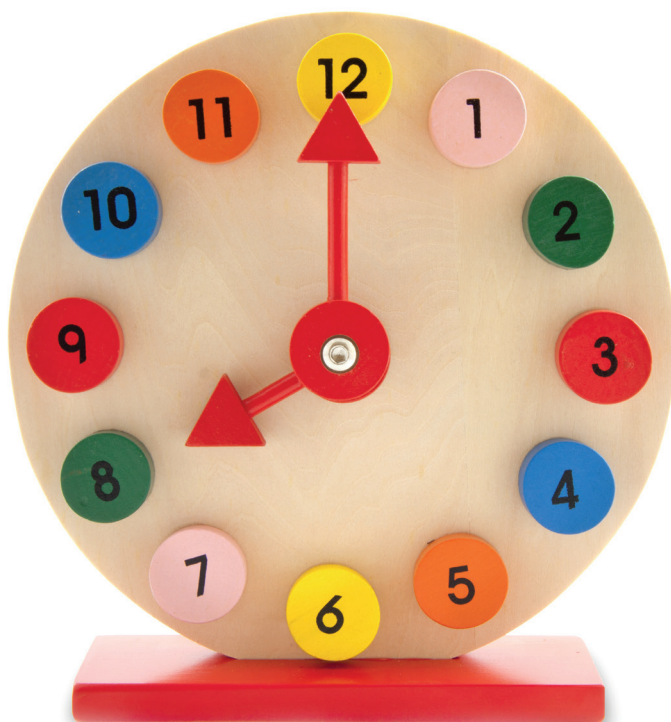

With all the financial demands being placed on our children today, it's no wonder that so many parents and grandparents are thinking about how they can help.

Although the sums involved can seem daunting at first, if you start early enough you have time on your side. Investing some money for your children over the long term – either as a lump sum or on a regular basis – can help to spread the cost and build a nest egg that can make a real difference to their futures.

This guide explains why you should consider investment companies as part of a long-term investment portfolio for your children. It looks at the different ways you can save and some issues you should think about before investing.

Remember that investment companies are long-term investments which put your money at risk. You should not invest money that you cannot afford to lose.

Why should you consider investment companies?

Whether you are planning to invest a lot or a little, investment companies offer plenty of benefits which should help you save effectively for your child.

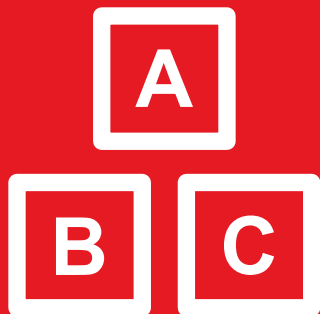

Long-term performance

The sooner you start, the more you can spread the cost and the longer your money has to grow. You could be investing for ten years or more. Investment companies can be risky in the short term, but often perform strongly over the long term.

A wider choice of investments

Investment companies offer a wider choice of investments. This can help you choose a level of risk that you are happy with, or to build a balanced portfolio over time.

Regular saving

In the early years, you are likely to have many other demands on your money. However, you can still make a start by putting small sums aside on a regular basis. Saving on a regular basis not only helps to spread the cost over time, it also helps to smooth out some of the ups and downs in the market. You can invest in investment companies through online platforms, a convenient way to buy and hold several different investments in one place. You can find out more information on these from the 'Ready to invest' section of the AIC website.

From little acorns

You can invest in investment companies from as little as £50 a month

Flexibility

Saving with investment companies is flexible. You can increase or decrease, or start and stop your contributions, at any time.

Ways to save

There are a number of different ways you can invest for your children. Online platforms provide a convenient way to buy and hold several different investments in one place, and many of them offer access to investment companies.

How to save for your children

Young children can't hold shares in their own name, so instead you can set up an account on their behalf. You can choose to hold investment company shares:

- In a 'designated account'

This means that you hold the shares in your own name, but designate them as being for your children. One advantage is that you keep control of the shares, and can decide when you hand them over to your children. You can also access the investments if you need to in an emergency.

- In a 'bare trust'

This is a simple form of trust which can be set up easily and quickly. The shares are legally held for the benefit of your children and so you have no entitlement to the income or proceeds. You cannot change your mind and will eventually have to hand the shares over to your children. You should also make sure you understand the tax consequences (see Things to consider).

If you want to have more control over what your children can do with the money, you could consider setting up a more formal trust. You should take legal advice before considering this option, and you will need to pay a solicitor for their time.

Smart move

Introducing your children to the savings habit early could really pay off in the long term

Junior ISA

A Junior ISA (JISA) is a special savings account for children with tax benefits. JISAs allow you to save using two main types of investments:

- Cash

This includes bank and building society savings accounts and National Savings. These provide a very safe home for your money but can offer limited income and growth prospects.

- Stocks and shares

This includes shares and collective funds such as investment companies, unit trusts and other similar funds. These are more risky, but can offer the chance of better returns over the long term. If you cannot afford to lose the money you put into an ISA, or think you might need your money quickly, you should not invest in investment companies and should probably stick with cash investments.

The main features are:

- It is tax free. Your children won't have to pay income tax on any dividends or capital gains tax when the shares are sold.
- Family and friends can contribute up to £9,000 each year. Children can have one cash and one stocks and shares JISA at the same time but this does not affect the limit – the £9,000 must be split between them.
- The investments in the account belong to your children. They can take control of the account when they are 16, but they will not be able to access the investments until they are 18.
- When they turn 18, the account will be converted into an adult ISA and can continue to grow tax free.

Child's pension

It may seem odd to think about a pension when they are still so young, but research shows that many people leave starting a pension too late. Getting your children started in the pensions habit early could really pay off in the long term. As the money will be locked away until they are at least 55, it will be invested for the very long term, which is where investment companies' track record is so strong.

If, later in life, your children don't have access to a good company pension scheme (for example, because they are self-employed), they will have a pension account ready and waiting for them to contribute to, with your contributions giving them a head start. You can pay in up to £2,880 each tax year on behalf of a child with the government adding up to £720 in tax relief, making £3,600 in total. The investments are free from UK income and capital gains taxes.

Children born 1 September 2002 to 2 January 2011

If any of your children were born from 1 September 2002 to 2 January 2011, then, instead of a Junior ISA, they will have a Child Trust Fund. This is very similar to a Junior ISA. Although no new Child Trust Funds can be set up, you can still contribute to them. Alternatively, you can transfer your Child Trust Fund to a Junior ISA.

Things to consider

Before you invest, asking yourself a few simple questions can help you make the right investment choices:

When do you need to access the money?

Some of the ways you can invest for a child involve tying up the money until they are 18. So they won't be suitable, say, for school fees planning or if you might need the money in an emergency.

How much control do you want?

Depending on how you invest, you may be required to hand over the investments to your children, at which point they can spend the money as they choose. If you want more control (e.g. to delay when they can access the money, or for what purpose), then you may be better off with a 'designated account' or a more formal trust drawn up by a solicitor.

How much risk do you want to take?

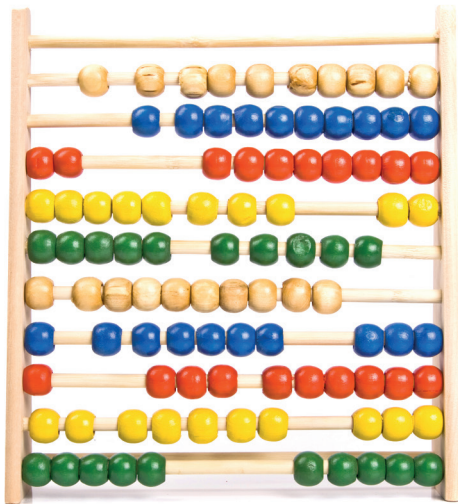

Generally, the longer the period you are investing over, the more risk you can take on, as your investments have time to recover from any short-term setbacks. Investment companies are primarily intended as long-term investments. You should be prepared to hold them for at least five years, and preferably ten or more.

If you are likely to need the money in the near future, or cannot afford to lose the money, you should not invest in investment companies.

Where to start?

If you are making your first investments for a child, you will probably want to start with a generalist investment company which invests in a wide range of different sectors. Some of the oldest, and most popular, investment companies can provide easy access to the stock market, and are often very cost effective.

Will tax be payable?

If you invest in investment companies via a 'designated account', then the shares remain yours and you will be taxed on the income and capital gains in the normal way.

If you put investment company shares into a 'bare trust', then they are held for the benefit of your children, who have their own income and capital gains tax annual allowances to reduce any tax liability.

However, if you make investments on behalf of a child which generate an income of £100 (gross) or more a year, the income will be deemed to be yours and you may have to pay income tax on it. This does not apply to contributions to a Junior ISA or Child Trust Fund, nor if the money was given by a grandparent, friend or other relation of the child.

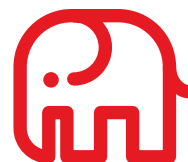

If you decide to make a gift to your children you should make sure you understand the inheritance tax implications. To learn more on this, and other tax issues, you can either visit HM Revenue and Customs' website (www.hmrc.gov.uk) or speak to a financial adviser.

Do you need advice?

Investing for your children can be complicated. You should consider taking independent financial and legal advice if you are not sure about how to invest, what type of investments might be suitable and the tax consequences.

Key things to remember

- Investment companies may be an option worth considering for your children, as you may be investing over a long period of time, meaning you can take on more risk in the hope of better returns.
- Investment companies are primarily intended as long-term investments. You should be prepared to hold them for at least five years, and preferably ten or more.
- Investment companies are accessible and flexible as you can invest small lump sums or regularly, and change the amounts you invest at any time.
- You can invest tax-efficiently in a Junior ISA or even a pension.
- You need to think carefully about when you might need the money, how much control you want over it and how much risk you are prepared to take.
- With investment companies, your income and capital is at risk and may fall as well as rise. You may not get back the full amount invested, and for higher-risk investment companies, you may get back nothing at all.
- If you are uncertain about whether, or which, investment companies might be suitable for investing for your children, how you should invest and the tax implications, you should take financial advice.

Don't forget

You can invest in a number of different ways, including Junior ISAs or even a pension
